"The final chorus consists of the first section of the opening chorus (closing on the dominant) and a well worked fugue on a good broad subject, which furnishes excellent passages of imitation, and a fine stretto and pedale at the conclusion—a portion of the subject being, after a pause on the dominant, brought in as a unison passage for voices and instruments, which breaks into the plagal cadence, and forms an effective conclusion to this really fine and original composition."—Musical Standard.
